Tale of Genji

By Lady Murasaki

I. Genji

A young man was named Genji, he spent his years reading a newspaper and feeling melancholy. He even was the son of a woman named Lady Irisukoi who died after the Emperor gave birth to Genji. And then of course Genji learnt the ways of the Jito late dynasty with Murasaki, a woman who was very weary of the world.

II. Murasaki and Red Tea Leaves, A Festival – after Utesmio a long Period of Economics and Ministers of the Right

As the women sat and drank tea at the dynasty's Palace, there was alot of discussions on Genji and Murasaki, that they will grow up together and die. All the ministers were busy with economics, and managing the conflicts of labour. Genji and Murasaki were melancholic and dying in tragic love, they even smoked cigarettes and had sexual passion.

III. Aoi – The Princess Heir with the new Emperor – The Death of Genji

In 1400, finally Tokugawa was born and for the long period 1000 BC – 1400 AD there was Jito late society, which belonged to Genji, after 10000 BC – 1000 BC which was a period of Irisukoi and Emperor I, which was their tale of passion and son Genji who was born in 4000 BC but spent his youth reading and writing which overlapps with the tale of Murasaki in 1000 BC.
